INTRODUCTION.

THE series of volumes preserved among the archives of the City of London at the Guildhall under the name of "Letter-Books"—so called from their being severally distinguished by a letter of the alphabet—have already been introduced to public notice by the late Mr. H. T. Riley in 'Memorials of London and London Life in the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Centuries,' edited by him in 1868 on behalf of the Corporation, under the superintendence of the Library Committee.

The series comprises just fifty volumes—lettered from A to Z (with two odd volumes marked respectively "&c." and "AB") and again from AA to ZZ—and in point of time extends from the early years of the reign of Edward I. almost to the close of the reign of James II. The earlier volumes (from which the 'Memorials' were compiled) possess the greater interest, inasmuch as they contain (inter alia) the chief, if not the only existing, record of the proceedings of the Court of Common Council and Court of Aldermen prior to the fifteenth century, when they were first entered in separate volumes, known respectively as Journals and Repertories.[1] The later volumes contain much that is also entered in the Journals and Repertories,[2] but the concluding volumes of the series are almost wholly devoted to orphanage matters. The Letter-Books are of vellum, whilst the Journals and Repertories are of paper.

Besides being known by distinctive letters, the earlier Letter-

[1] The Journals commence in 1416, the Repertories in 1495. Before the commencement of the latter the proceedings of the Court of Aldermen were recorded in the Journals.

[2] The entries in the Journals and Repertories are often roughly made, whereas those in the Letter-Books appear fair copies.

Books originally bore other titles. Thus we find Letter-Book A referred to in the 'Liber Horn' and elsewhere as the 'Lesser Black Book' (Parvus or Minor Liber Niger[1]); Letter-Book B as the 'Black Book' (Liber Niger[2]); Letter-Book C as the 'Greater Black Book' (Major or Maximus Liber Niger[3]); Letter-Book D as the 'Red Book' (Liber Rubeus[4]); and Letter-Book E as the 'White Book' or 'New White Book of Writs and Memoranda' (Liber Albus or Liber Albus novus de brevibus et memorandis[5]).

These titles were no doubt derived from the comparative size of each volume and the original colour of its binding.[6] The value of these earlier records was fully realized by Andrew Horn, the well-known jurist and sometime Chamberlain of the City, no less than by John Carpenter, the City's famous Town Clerk, both of whom drew largely upon these volumes for their own respective compilations of City customs and ordinances, viz., the 'Liber Horn' and the book known par excellence as the City's 'Liber Albus.' Later on these books of "Remembrances" (as they were sometimes called) were utilized by Fabyan, by Stow, and others.

Like other volumes of the City's records, the Letter-Books appear to have had their vicissitudes. Thus on the fly-leaf of Letter-Book E we find the following statement written in a hand of the sixteenth century:—

"Memorand' that this Boke of E was lost & was lackyng of a long seasoun untill the viijth day of July in the xxxijth yere of the reign of Kyng Henry the viijth that Robert Broke coen' seriaunte[7] espied out the seid Boke and caused it to be redemyd unto the Chambre of London &c. die et anno predictis."

This is corroborated by the record of the proceedings of the Court of Aldermen. The volume had fallen into the hands of a "gentilman"—an acquaintance if not a friend of the Common

[6] The present bindings are quite modern, and (with the exception of Letter-Book D, which, by a curious coincidence, has a red leather covering) are of white vellum.

[7] Afterwards Recorder of the City and Chief Justice of Common Pleas.

Serjeant—and on the 1st of July, 1540, that distinguished law-officer was instructed by the Court to make an offer of 20*s.* for its surrender[1]:—

"Item yt ys agreyd that Mr Broke Coen' Seriaunt shall make an offree of 20*s.* to a gentilman of hys acqueyntaunce for a boke belongyng to thys Cytie called the boke of E whiche the seyd gentilman hath & to make report therof to thys Court &c."

Broke appears to have had an easy task, for a week later he brought the book into Court, with a solemn asseveration (provocative of a smile) that he had expended the whole of the money entrusted to him for the purpose, and had himself reaped no pecuniary benefit out of the transaction[2]:—

"Item Mr Broke Coen' Seriaunt brought in the boke of E belongyng to thys Cytye whyche boke had been longe myssyng. And reported to thys Court upon his honestye that yt cost hym no less then 20*s.* whiche he before receyvyd of Mr Chamberleyn for the redempcon' therof."

How the book went astray and what length of time it had been missing we shall probably never know. It might have been borrowed, as other books of the City have been borrowed, and for a time, if not for ever, lost.[3] But there is no need to suppose the Letter-Book to have been borrowed to account for its loss, if we consider the lax manner in which the City's records were written up by the four clerks or attorneys of the Mayor's Court prior to 1537, when stringent regulations were promulgated for future practice.[4] Hitherto each clerk had been in the habit of keeping in his own custody the books or calendars upon which he happened to be engaged for the time being. This would sufficiently account for the irregular, and at times haphazard, manner in which entries have been made in (at least) the first two Letter-Books, and for their overlapping each other in point of chronology. Thus Letter-Book A comprises the period from circa 1275-1298, and Letter-Book B from circa 1275–1313.

[3] Instances of the kind are cited by Riley in his Introduction (pp. viii, ix) to 'Memorials,' and they might be multiplied. Thus at Fabyan's death we find Walter Smith, who had married the widow of the famous chronicler, returning to the Court of Aldermen a valuable City manuscript known as the 'Chronicles of France,' which had long been in the deceased's keeping (Repertory 3, fo. 93 b).

The character of the Letter-Books in general must not be judged from these two books, the pages of which are chiefly concerned with recognizances of debts.[1] These recognizances, however, have their value as illustrating the commercial intercourse of the citizens of London with Gascony and Spain in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, more especially in connexion with wine and leather. Hence the appearance of the names of those sworn as "correctors" (coretarii), or licensed brokers, of those commodities on the first page of Letter-Book A.

Another prominent feature of both these books is the record of the Assize of Bread,[2] as set from time to time by the municipal authorities. Here, too, as will be seen on p. 207 of this volume, the record has been irregularly kept, and little respect is paid to chronological order. The mode of fixing the price of bread was of so intricate and technical a character that it was deemed advisable to give no more than a passing notice of it in this Calendar.

To return to the Recognizances.

By the Statute of Acton Burnel (Stat. 11 Edward I.) it was enacted (inter alia) that recognizances of debts should be taken before the Mayor and a clerk appointed by the King. Nevertheless, within a very short while after the passing of this statute, and notwithstanding its express provision to the contrary, we find the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen declaring that such recognizances should be made before the City Chamberlain,[3] who might, if he liked, receive (as he frequently did) the recognizances at his own house instead of at the Guildhall.[4]

[1] The extracts from Letter-Book A appearing in the 'Memorials' scarcely number a dozen all told.

[2] The curious reader will find the subject exhaustively treated in a book entitled 'Artachthos, or A New Book declaring The Assize or Weight of Bread,' &c., London, 1638, reprinted 1748.

[3] Infra, p. 79.

[4] See 'Liber Horn' (fo. cclxiv b): "Memorandum quod Camerarius Gildaule London recepit recogniciones debitorum ubique in civitate extra Gildaulam sicut patet in parvo nigro libro Gildaule inter recogniciones bene in principio libri et illi libro A litera intitulatur in xv folio et deinceps, etc."

A fee in proportion to the amount involved was charged for the enrolment of each recognizance, but an Alderman was exempt, just as he was also exempt from payment for enrolment of any kind of charter or deed.[1]

It was frequently a stipulation of these recognizances that the money should be paid in good, round, unclipped coin, whether pence or halfpence. This was especially the case about the year 1278, and was due to the fact that for some time past the coin of the realm had been so abominably clipped as to lose half its weight and value. The price of every commodity had in consequence become enhanced and foreign commerce had been reduced to stagnation. The Jews were the chief culprits, having taken to this method of recouping some of the loss they had sustained by a recent enactment which forbade them altogether to exact any kind of usury in future.[2] But the Jews were not the only offenders. There were not wanting goldsmiths and money-changers ready to take a hand in the ignoble game of "sweating" coin, or at least to aid and abet those engaged in the nefarious practice.

The evil became so great that in November, 1278, the King determined to put a stop to it, and gave orders for the immediate arrest of all suspected Jews and their Christian accomplices. Those taken in the City were brought to the Guildhall and there held to bail (vadiati).[3] Early in the following year they were brought to trial before Stephen de Penshurst, Walter de Helyun, and John de Cobham, the King's Justiciars sent to the Guildhall for the purpose. The trial lasted until Lent began, when the judges rose, and was resumed after Easter.

There seems little doubt that it was owing to these proceedings taking place at the Guildhall that Hugh Motun, the City Chamberlain (or one of the City Chamberlains, for at times there seem to have been more than one), found it convenient to take recognizances at his house or shop instead of at his official place of business.[1] At the close of the trial nearly three hundred Jews were condemned to be hanged, and three Christians, nearly all the goldsmiths and moneyers arrested on suspicion escaping the death penalty, even if they did not get off scot free. About Whitsuntide proclamation was made withdrawing from currency all clipped money, exchanges being set up at the Tower of London and in various other cities and boroughs, where the bad money might be brought in and, on payment of the deficit, be exchanged for good. The exchanges throughout the realm were placed in charge of one who figures largely in the City's history, viz., Gregory de Rokesle, who was at that time filling the Mayoralty chair for the sixth year in succession.[2]

To add to the discomfiture of the Jew in the City, a series of ordinances had recently been passed under Rokesle's rule, the first being to the effect that the King's peace should be kept between Christians and Jews; but this ordinance had been afterwards altered (probably in consequence of the King's action against the Jews over the clipped money business), and Jews were struck out of the ordinance. They were in effect not to be considered in the King's peace, although at all times regarded as the King's chattel.[3]

Another ordinance forbade "foreign" butchers (i. e., butchers not freemen of the City) buying meat from Jews to resell to Christians, or meat slaughtered for Jews and by them rejected. The meaning of the concluding words of this ordinance is best illustrated by certain proceedings which took place before the King's Council at Westminster in 1274, during the King's absence abroad, whither also the Mayor, Henry le Galeys, had gone. The proceedings are recorded in the City's 'Liber de Antiquis Legibus,'[4] where it appears that shortly before Midsummer the Sheriffs and certain discreet men of the City appeared before the Council, and the following questions were put to them :—

"It is notorious that the Jews kill with their own hands all beasts and fowls whose flesh they eat. But some beasts they consider of their law, and some not; the flesh of those which are of their law they eat, and not the flesh of others. What then do the Jews do with the flesh of those which are not of their law? Is it lawful for Christians to buy and eat it?"

In reply, the citizens declared that if any Christian bought any such flesh of a Jew, he would be immediately excommunicated, and if convicted thereof by the Sheriffs of the City or by any one else he would lose such flesh and it would be given to the lepers or to the dogs to eat, and he would be heavily amerced by the Sheriffs. They further expressed their willingness to visit such delinquents with heavier punishment if the Council thought fit. To this the Council replied that seeing the matter concerned the Jews, who were the property of the King, they would not advise a severer form of punishment for the Christians in his lordship's absence, but they straitly commanded the citizens in virtue of their fealty to cause the custom rigidly to be observed. Hence, no doubt, its appearance among these ordinances. One other ordinance was directed against this ill-fated race, and this forbade the letting or hiring of residential houses to or from Jews, who were to be strictly relegated to the Jewry—the London Ghetto.[1]

The recognizances in Letter-Book A terminate in 1294,[2] and are immediately followed by a series of deeds extending from 1281 to 1293, the recognizances and deeds being the chief feature of the volume, the rest being occupied by miscellaneous matters and additions of a later date, inserted wherever space permitted. Thus on fos. 89 b–92 we find ordinances touching the fishmongers of the City, in French, with another set of ordinances regulating the seasons for fishing, the size of nets to be used, &c., in English, and between the two an account of the burning of a "false kidell" of a considerably later date, written in Latin. On fo. 101 and following folios we have the names of the various Sheriffs elected between 1278 and 1293 (roughly speaking), and again between 1298 and 1302, together with the names of their respective sureties sworn to see that they paid the City's ferm. Sometimes they are set down as Sheriffs of London, and sometimes as Sheriffs of London and Middlesex. On pp. 75–6 will be found what appears to be a unique instance of a Sheriff of Middlesex recorded eo nomine in the City's archives, as distinct from the Sheriff (or Sheriffs) of London, prior to the passing of the Local Government Act of 1888. The date of the record is 1283, and it purports to be an acknowledgment by Nicholas de Winchester of a sum of money due to the King on his accounts during his Shrievalty in 1280–1, and an acquittance to Anketin de Bettevile and Walter le Blound, the then Sheriffs of London, and to Gerin, then Sheriff of Middlesex, who held a writ of distress for the money. The explanation of this seems to be that the Sheriffs of London, who held the Sheriffwick of Middlesex at a ferm (under charter of Henry I.), had, so to speak, sub-let it; for, in the same year, we find a formal judgment given by the Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs to the effect that thenceforth (as if the practice had been, or was likely to become, common) the Sheriffs of London should not deliver the county of Middlesex to ferm.[1]

An early copy of the Statute of Westminster the First—almost a code by itself, covering, as it does, the whole field of legislation—is recorded on fos. 118–125 b, but has not been set out by the Editor for the reason that with the exception of two short paragraphs, each commencing E si viscuntes ou coroners ou autre Bailifs, &c. (fos. 119–120), the whole is printed in the 'Statutes at Large' (ed. 1758, vol. i. pp. 40–57). This is followed (fos. 125 b–126) by extracts from the Statute of Gloucester passed three years later, viz., A.D. 1278.[1] It was based on the returns of a great commission of inquiry instituted on the King's return from the Holy Land after the death of his father, with a view to correct various abuses and usurpations of Crown rights that had arisen during the turbulent reign of King Henry III. The results of this searching inquiry (to which the City of London like the rest of the kingdom had to submit) are recorded in the Rotuli Hundredorum or Hundred Rolls,[2] and formed the basis of articles known as Capitula Itineris, delivered by the Justices in Eyre on going circuit, and were the immediate cause of the first chapter of the Statute of Gloucester. The chapters set out in the Letter-Book are those which more particularly affected the citizens of London, viz., caps. 11–15.

We learn from the City's 'Liber Custumarum'[3] that chapter 12 had been inserted in the statute for the express purpose of removing a grievance of the citizens. Before the Act the custom had prevailed in the City that when any one impleaded in the Husting vouched to warranty a stranger (forinsecum), the matter was adjourned until the next Iter at the Tower. This occasioned oftentimes much delay and hardship, and the citizens had in consequence appealed to the King for a remedy. Accordingly, it was enacted by this twelfth chapter of the Statute of Gloucester that if a man impleaded for a tenement in the City vouched to warranty a stranger, he should come into the Chancery and have a writ to summon the warrantor on a certain day before the Justices of the Bench, and another writ to the Mayor and Bailiffs ordering them to stay proceedings in the Husting until the plea of warranty should be determined before the Bench. The remedy proved little better than the disease, for the King's Chancery being in those days a movable Court, it was not always an easy matter to sue out a writ, and thus default in appearance frequently took place and all was lost. Further representations were therefore made to the King, and in 1282 the chapter was amended. It was no longer to be necessary to sue out a writ in Chancery; but the Mayor and Bailiffs were themselves to send the matter direct to the Justices of the Bench, the rest of the proceedings remaining much as before.[1] For thirty-three years and more this procedure, we are told, was followed, the Justices of the Bench always receiving the records sent in by the Mayor and Sheriffs, and thereupon summoning the stranger called to warranty to appear before them, until in the seventh year of Edward II. exception was taken to the practice as being contrary to the Statute of Gloucester. The Justices examined the statute and examined the terms of the chapter as amended (or article, as it was called) sent to the Mayor and Sheriffs by the King, and, finding them not to agree, forthwith quashed the proceedings. Matters began to look serious, for if the amended chapter were to prove of no effect, all the proceedings that had been taken under it, whether before the Justices of the Bench or in the Husting, would be null and void. The civic authorities, with John de Gisors at their head, instituted a search among the Rolls of Chancery and the Rolls and Writs of the Justices of the Bench in each year since the amendment of the "article," in order to see what procedure had been used. The records for two years and more were thereupon carefully examined, and nothing being found to throw light on the subject, a Writ of Certiorari, addressed to the King's Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer, was sought for and obtained. This was in April, 1316. A second search, officially carried out, proved successful, a record being discovered of a case in 1290 to which the amended "article" was annexed. A return to the writ being duly made to that effect, the King's Council agreed that a warrant under the royal seal should issue to the Justices of the Bench, enjoining them to follow in future the procedure set out in the article in all cases of strangers being called to warranty in the Husting of London, notwithstanding such article being at variance with the statute. A writ was accordingly issued on the 2nd of May following.[1]

The year 1285 was a memorable one in the City's annals as marking what was little less than a civic revolution. The City lost its franchise, and for thirteen years was "in the King's hand," being governed by a Warden of his selection and appointment, instead of by a Mayor appointed by the citizens. Many fresh regulations were made, as we know, upon this change of government,[2] and it is to this crisis in the City's history that we are indebted (I venture to think) for the earliest extant record of the names of the Aldermen and their respective Wards, as well as of the names of those appointed to assist them in the government of the City, as set out on folio 116 of Letter-Book A.[3]

Among the regulations just mentioned were some for keeping watch and ward in the City,[4] and in the volume before us we find Ralph de Sandwich, then Warden of the City, in conjunction with the Aldermen, allotting the several gates of the City to the custody of certain Wards.[5] This was in 1287, or two years after the City had been taken into the King's hand. The list is interesting as showing a transition state, when the Wards were becoming known by their territorial designations instead of by the names of their respective Aldermen for the

[1] A record of the whole of these proceedings is preserved in the 'Liber Cust.,' i. 169–177. Cf. Husting, Common Pleas, Roll 40, membr. 20.

[2] The ordinances set out in the 'Liber Albus' (Rolls Series), i. 280–297, have the following introductory words in the 'Liber Custumarum' (fo. 217): Ceux sount les establicementz qe le Roi Edward fist qant il prist en sa main la fraunchise de la cite, et sount les uns usez en temps qant ilad sa fraunchise.

[3] In support of the conjecture that the list should be ascribed to either 1285 or 1286 may be mentioned the fact that all the Aldermen in the list are named in two deeds dated January, 1286, and enrolled in the Husting —Roll 19 (19), (20)—with the exception of Stephen Aswy, whose absence may be accounted for by the fact that he had been committed to prison for the part he had recently played in the well-known incident which led the King to disfranchise the City. See 'London and the Kingdom,' i. 120–122. Moreover, by February, 1286, John de Norhampton appears no longer as Alderman of Aldgate, his place being taken by William de Hereford. See Hust. Roll 17 (22).

time being. It gives us also the names of the gates then in existence, and under the denomination of "Danes" mentions the merchants of the Hanse of Almaine, whose duty it was not only to keep Bishopsgate in good repair, but also to take their part in guarding it whenever necessary, in accordance with the terms of a "composition" made between them and the citizens in June, 1282. The "Danes" were to occupy the middle portion of the gate (in medio), the men of the Ward being above and below them.[1] In return for their undertaking the above duties, the Hanse merchants were to be for ever free from payment of murage, a tax which the civic authorities were permitted by the King to levy from time to time on goods entering the City, to enable them to keep the City's wall and gates in a state of efficiency.[2]

[1] The position assigned to the Hanse merchants in the "composition," for the purpose of defence, was the upper part of the gate ('Liber Albus,' i. 485–488; Letter-Book C, fo. 30 b).

Fo. 55 b. Letter from John, Duke of Brittany and Earl of Richmond, to R[alph] de Sandwich, Warden of the City, and Commons of the same, acknowledging the receipt of letter complaining of the conduct of the Duke's stewards and bailiffs towards the citizens of London at his Fair of St. Botolph's. He is sending his steward Richemund to notify his wishes to the citizens, promising to see justice done. Dated the Feast of Innocents [28 Dec.].

The King's writ to Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, his locum tenens in England. Whereas, at the request of the citizens and merchants of Bordeaux, he had recently given orders that they should be allowed to bring their wines, &c., into the City of London on payment of the accustomed dues, the citizens of London now complained that such a proceeding was prejudicial to their liberties. He is to summon a council and to see justice done to both parties. Dated at "Bona Garda," in Gascony, 18 Jan., 17 Edward I. [A.D. 1288–9].

Be it remembered that on Thursday after the Feast of St. Matthias [24 Feb.], 19 Edward I. [A.D. 1290–1], came Fulk le Bret, on whom a "macer" cup had been seized for an assessment of 3*s.*, temp. Hugh Motun, Chamberlain, and granted the Monday after the Feast of Purification [2 Feb.], 16 Edward I. [A.D. 1287-8], was read a certain writing whereby Hamo le Ferrun and Isabella his wife demised to Gilbert de Ufford, potter, and Alice his wife, their tenement in Bordhawe,[2] in the parish of St. Mary de Colecherche, near the tenements of Martin Hauteyn and John Patrick. To hold for a term of six years from Easter next at an annual rent of 20*s*. In case of sale the lessees to have the right of pre-emption by 40 sterlinges, and by 12 sterlinges in case of further lease. The lessees pay the lessors 60*s*. in hand. Witnesses, Ralph de Sandwich, Warden of the City; William de Hereford and Thomas de Stanes, Sheriffs; William de Betton, John le Coffrer, Adam le Chaundiler, Salomon le Cotiler, John Patrick, Geoffrey Patrick, Adam de St. Alban, junior, Walter Hardi, John Clerk, and others [not named].

The same day was read a certain writing of defeasance of a grant by Robert de Esthalle and Johanna his wife to Thomas Romayn and Juliana his wife of a certain tenement in the parish of Aldermaricherche near the tenement of Hugh Motun, in perpetuity, at an annual rent of 10*l*. and one pound of cumin. At Fo. 79 b.

[1] This is curious. It does not appear that Ralph de Sandwich was ever an alderman. The ward in which Soper Lane was situate was Cordwainer Street, of which Henry le Waleys was alderman.

[2] According to Riley ('Memorials,' Introd., p. xi), this was probably the name of a board-yard or timber-yard. It may have been so. On the other hand, the fact that "Bordhawe" is mentioned in the will of Richard de Gloucestre ('Calendar of Wills Hust. of London,' i. 302) in connexion with "Gropecuntelane," and that the Stews in Southwark were known as the "Bordello," seems to point to a different interpretation.

the end of twenty years, if the said Thomas and Juliana so wish, the property to revert, the lessees being allowed a sum of money for disbursements, &c. Witnesses, Sir Ralph de Sandwych, Warden of the City; Thomas de Stanes and William de Hereford, Sheriffs; Henry le Waleys, Alderman of the Ward;[1] Robert de Arras, Hugh Motun, Robert Sackere, Robert de Kidemenstre, William le Chaundiler, William Beck, Robert Wylebeck, Thomas Heyrun, and William de Somersete, clerk. Dated London, Friday after the Feast of Purification [2 Feb.], 16 Edward I. [A.D. 1287–8].

The same day was read a certain writing of defeasance of a grant by Ralph Hardel to Arnald Skynat and Reymund de Nevile, merchants of Tholouse, of an annual quitrent of 10 marks issuing from his lands, rents, and tenements in the parish of St. Martin in the Vintry, upon condition of payment by the said Ralph to the said Arnald and Reymund of the sum of 28*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

Fo. 80. Monday the morrow of St. Mark [25 April], 16 Edward I. [A.D. 1288], there came in full Husting in Pleas of Land Michael de Meledon and John Godsalin, attorneys of the Earl of Cornwall, and put their claim, on behalf of the said Earl and Ralph the Rector of the House of Asseregge[2] and Convent of the same, upon Ralph del North de "Hemelhamelstede,"[3] John Laurence his brother, Adam, son of the said Ralph, Gilbert and Jurdan his brothers, Robert Podifat, Robert de la Forde, John de la Burne, and....., as being their bondmen (nativos) and fugitives, seisin having been given to them one month after Michaelmas, anno 15 Edward I. They pray that the said fugitives may not be admitted to the freedom of the City, inasmuch as they were prepared to prosecute them as their bondmen and fugitives quando, &c.[4]

Monday after the Invention of H. Cross [3 May], 16 Edward I. [A.D. 1288], a certain writing was read before Sir Ralph de Hingeham, the King's Justiciar, and Ralph de Sandwych, Warden of the City, and the Aldermen, whereby Geoffrey, son and heir of Stephen de Mundene, confirmed a lease granted by his father to Thomas Romeyn of a tenement in the parish of St. Antonin, situate near the tenements of John le Vavaseur and Robert de Arras, for a term of nineteen years from Christmas, anno 15 Edward I., for the sum of 75 marks in hand paid, and extending the term by one year for the remission of a debt of 10 marks due from his father to the said Thomas. Witnesses, Sirs John de Lovetot, William de Carleton, Roger de Leycestre, Gregory de Rokesle, John de Bakewelle, William le Mazeliner, Robert de Basinge, Joyce le Akatur, William de Farindone, William de Somersete, clerk, and others [not named]. Dated London, the Feast of SS. Philip and James [1 May], 16 Edward I. [A.D. 1288].

The same day was read a certain writing wherein Thomas Romeyn acknowledged that he had delivered to Geoffrey, son of Stephen de Mundene, two deeds whereby the said Stephen had conveyed to him two tenements and a shop in the parishes of H. Trinity the Less and St. Matthew de Fridayestrate, and the said Geoffrey had confirmed to him a lease of a tenement in the parish of St. Antonin. He quitclaims to the said Geoffrey all his claim to the above tenements under the deeds aforesaid with the exception of the warranty to the above tenements. Witnesses, Sirs John de Lovetot, William de Carleton, Roger de Leycestre, Walter Hauteyn, Richard le Furners, William de Bettoyne, Simon Godard, William de Somersete, clerk, and others [not named]. Fo. 80 b.

Monday the morrow of the Assumption [15 Aug.], 16 Edward I. [A.D. 1288], came Richard, son of Richard le Kissere,[1] and acknowledged that he had received from Reginald Poyntel, one of the executors of his father, the sum of £4 in part payment of one-third of his father's goods.

Monday before the Feast of St. Martin [11 Nov.], 16 Edward I. [A.D. 1288], a writing was enrolled before the Chamberlain of London in a book de reconvencionibus, whereby John le Poter covenanted with the Abbat and Convent of Ramsey[1] to build in their house a new laundry (lavatorium) of good and durable metal, 33 feet in length and 2½ feet or more in height, of strong and sufficient thickness, together with sixteen copper keys (clavibus) of subtle design and richly gilt, and four fillets (filetis) through the centre, similarly made of copper richly gilt, in return for 45 marks and a gown, whereof the sum of £10 is to be paid in hand, and £10 at Easter next, and the balance when the work is finished. The said John to provide the keys and fillets, whilst the Abbat and Convent provide the tin and other necessaries, an account being rendered by the said John of the metal so received. The Convent covenants, further, to find the said John and two workmen in the following, viz., for himself every day two loaves of bread, one of monks' bread (panem monachi), the other of the hall (panem aule); also two gallons of beer from the Convent cask, and on flesh days a dish of meat (ferculum) and a pittance (pietanciam), whilst on fish days it would similarly provide a dish of fish and a pittance; for each of his servants, every day, two loaves of the hall and two gallons of household beer; on flesh days, to each a dish of meat, and on fish days a dish of fish. It covenants also to provide the said John's horse with hay and provender. Sureties for the said John, viz., "le Balauncer" [sic], William Cosyn, John le Coffrer, and Thomas de Norwych. Dated at "Ramesy," the Feast of St. Edward, King and Confessor [13 Oct.], A.D. 1288.

Fo. 81. Monday after the Feast of SS. Peter and Paul [29 June], 16 Edward I. [A.D. 1288], were read letters patent addressed by John de Northwode to the Master and Brethren of the Hospital of St. Thomas de Acon, notifying that he had demised, by fine made in the King's Court at Westminster, to Sir William Peyforer and Lora his wife an annual rent of 18 marks for the lifetime of the said Lora. Friday the Feast of St. Katherine [25 Nov.], 18 Edward I. [A.D. 1289], a writing was acknowledged whereby Sir William de Hameltone demised to Walter de Castello all lands and tenements which the said William had in the manors of Gingg'[4] and Witford,[5] formerly belonging to Sir Reginald de Gingg', who held them under Sir William de Montchesney in chief; which lands, &c., the executors of the said Sir William de Montchesney demised to the said Sir William until the heir of the said Sir Reginald should come of age. To hold to the said Walter for the same period at an annual rent of £34, his sureties being Roger le Paumer and Robert de Wilebek. Dated the Feast of St. Edmund [20 Nov.], 18 Edward I. [A.D. 1289].

Fo. 82. Tuesday after the Feast of St. Edmund, King [20 Nov.], 18 Edward I. [A.D. 1289], a writing was acknowledged whereby Robert de la Tur confessed to having received the sum of 100 marks, which Emma Baynel his wife had recently transferred at his request from the house of John de Linlleye to a safer place. This acknowledgment he makes with his own mouth in the Husting of London, and asks that it may be enrolled on the registry paper.

Monday after the Feast of St. Peter in Cathedra [22 Feb.], 18 Edward I. [A.D. 1289–90], a certain writing was acknowledged whereby John de "Schaftesbere" was bound to John de "Wideton," clerk, and Isabella his wife in the sum of 11 marks, the balance of 23 marks due in respect of a tenement bought and sold; to be paid at Easter. Sureties on behalf of the said John de "Schaftesbere" and Roesia his wife, viz., Robert de Wetheringeseth, chaplain of Sir Nicholas de Wynchester, and Gilbert called "le Palmere," Marshal of London. Witnesses, Nicholas de Wynchester, John Breban, Simon de Paris, and others [not named]. Dated London, the Feast of St. Martin [11 Nov.], 17 Edward I. [A.D. 1289].

(Saturday the eve of Easter, anno 18, came John de "Wydinton" and Isabella his wife and acknowledged that John de "Schaftesberi" had satisfied them of the above money. It is therefore cancelled.) Fo. 82 b.

Saturday in Easter week, 18 Edward I. [A.D. 1290], came Geoffrey de Northon, clerk to the Warden of London, and acknowledged himself bound to William Oggel, Henry de Belhus, and Dionisia, relict of Walter "attecherche," executors of the said Walter, in the sum of £7, which he will pay by quarterly instalments of half a mark until, &c. nil ad instanc' G. de Norton.

Thursday after the Feast of St. James [25 July], 18 Edward I. [A.D. 1290], was read a deed of covenant between Alexander de Fordich, master of la Juenette of Warham, and Peter Barnavile de Bordeus to commit their disputes about certain wines, &c., to the arbitrament of Sir John de Ried, clerk to the lord the King, Remund Adreman, merchant of Bordeus, Richard de Wimburn, and John de la Vinetrie, clerk, of London. Witnesses, Rauf de Sandwis, Warden of London; Fouke de Seint Emaund, Salamon le Cotiler, Sheriffs; Alein de Suffolk, taverner, Alayn de Suffolk, cordwainer, Robert le Escot, Robert Hardel, and John le Clerk.

Tuesday before the Feast of Pentecost [10 June], 19 Edward I. [A.D. 1291], Robert de Sutton, guardian of Robert, son of John Deumars, Cristiana Deumars, mother of the said ward, and other friends came before Ralph de Sandwych, Warden of London, John de Cant', John le Blunt, and William de Betoynne, Chamberlain of the Guildhall, and acknowledged that they had entered into an account with William de Laufare, cutler, touching the goods and chattels of the aforesaid Robert Deumars entrusted to the said William, and they had found remaining over in his custody the sum of £32 sterling in money of the cutlers (in denariis cotellariorum), for which he would render an account, as also for the increase thereof (de appruamento), on the coming of age of the said Robert. And be it known that all writings and other muniments formerly entered into were by consent cancelled. Fo. 84.

Saturday the Feast of Translation of St. Thomas [7 July], 19 Edward I. [A.D. 1291], a certain writing was enrolled whereby Hugh de Freningham (or Freninham) and Margery Heyrun his wife demised to William de Helweton a tenement in the parish of St. Antonin, situate near the tenements of Simon Godard and Robert de Arraz. To hold for a term of three years from Michaelmas next for the sum of 10 marks in hand paid. In case the lessors desire to sell or let the said tenement for a longer period, the lessee to be preferred. For greater evidence of the matter the lessors desire that the writing may be enrolled in full Husting.[1] Witnesses, Sir Ralph de Sandwych, Warden of the City; Thomas Romeyn, William de Leyre, Sheriffs; Simon Godard, William de Bettoyne, William Beck, William Mazeliner.

Inquisition for the Bridge of Walebrok near Bokerelesbiry.

[1] Hust. Roll 20 (91).

William de "Betonia" and Walter Hauteyn, Aldermen, an inquisition was made on oath by John Patrik, John de Strogoil,[1] Thomas de Conduit, Augustine le Gaunter, John May, "poter," William de Dunstaple, "seler," Adam le Chaundeler, Peter le Furbur, and Nicholas le Barber, of the Ward of Chepe; Adam de Burton, Thomas de Oxford, Walter de Reda, William Bochard, and Geoffrey le Botoner, of the Ward of Walebrok; Thomas le Batour, Walter de Lothebere, Matthew le Paumer, William de St. Christopher, Reginald le Seler, and Martin le Barber, of the Ward of Thomas de Stanes;[2] William le Lou, Robert de Leycestre, William Smythiot, and Henry le Perler, of the Ward of Cornhill, as to who is or are bound by right to repair the bridge of Walebrok near Bokerelesbere, and who had been accustomed to do it and in what manner, &c. The jurors say that a certain tenement formerly belonging to Richard de Walebrok, and now held by Thomas Box; another tenement in the same street formerly belonging to John de Tulesan, senior, and now held by John de Tulesan, junior; another tenement formerly belonging to Laurence Fitz Michael, and now held by the Society of Luka and John le Mazerer; and the tenement of Bokerelesbere held by the heirs of Roger Beyvyn, are bound to repair the bridge aforesaid, and have been accustomed so to do in common. They further say that of old four stones used to be placed opposite the aforesaid tenements, one stone before each tenement, in token of their duty to repair the bridge; but these were afterwards removed by Walter Hervy, the then improver (aprouator)[3]

[3] The term appruator was sometimes applied to an officer appointed in a town to look after the interests of the lord of the manor (Martin, 'Record Interpreter,' Glossary, s.v.). It is translated "improver" in Riley's translation of this passage ('Memorials,' p. 25). Compare with this the appointment of Elias Russel and Henry le Bole as appropriatores by the King in 1293, the year of their Shrievalty. See 'Chron. Edward I. and II.' (Rolls Series, No. 76), i. 102. If Hervey removed the stones mentioned in the text during his Shrievalty, it was probably in the year 1268–9, when the City was "in the King's hand" and Hervey and William de Durham were appointed bailiffs "without election by the citizens" ('Chron. Mayors and Sheriffs,' pp. 112, 113).

Monday before the Feast of Conversion of St. Paul [25 Jan.], 20 Edward I. [A.D. 1291–2], came Robert le Norreys, painter, and John de Rothinges, "coureur," executors of Margery, relict of Nicholas de Netton, and acknowledged that they had received the sum of £20 from Adam Bidick by the hands of Richard de Stanlewe his servant; in which sum the said Adam stood bound to the said Margery by letter obligatory, which is given up to him.

Tuesday before the Feast of St. Matthew, Ap. [21 Sept.], 19 Edward I. [A.D. 1291], came John de Thornham and Emma de Laufare[1] his wife and Gilbert le Marescal and caused to be enrolled a writing whereby the said John de Thornham, co. Norfolk, and Emma de Lawefare his wife, daughter of Eustace Fitz Walter, formerly of "Groschurche," demised to Gilbert called "le Paumer," marshal, and William Amys, fishmonger, three shops in St. Clement's Lane, in the parish of St. Clement, near the tenements of the aforesaid Gilbert and Gilbert de Colecestre. To hold for a term of ten years from Michaelmas for £9 and half a mark, besides half a mark to be paid annually to Nicholas de Wynchester, the chief lord of the fee. Fo. 85.

Monday before the Feast of St. Botolph [17 June], 20 Edward I. [A.D. 1292], came John de Meleford and Agnes his wife before William le Mazeliner[2] and Thomas Box,[3] Aldermen, and acknowledged a writing whereby they demised to William de Bettoyne an annual quitrent of 18*s*., viz., 9*s*. from the tenement of Thomas Sely in the parish of St. Mary de Aldermariberi and 9*s*. from a tenement called la Fo. 85 b.

Saturday the eve of the Feast of SS. Peter and Paul [29 June], 20 Edward I. [A.D. 1292], a writing was acknowledged in the presence of Robert de Rokesle[4] and Thomas Box, Aldermen, whereby Walter de Burwelle, merchant, and Johanna his wife demised to William de Bettoyne an annual quitrent of 18 marks issuing from a tenement held by Joce atte Welle in the parish of St. Sepulchre without Neugate, and a tenement held by Joce le Pestur in the parish of St. Margaret de Lotheberi. To hold for a term of four years from Midsummer. Witnesses, Ralph de Sandwych, Warden of the City; Ralph le Blound and Hamo Box, Sheriffs; William de Farndon, Alderman of the Ward; Joce atte Welle, William Ediman, William le Taylur, William Beck, Stephen Hauteyn, Ralph Godchep, and others [not named].

Fo. 86. Friday after the Feast of St. Michael [29 Sept.], 20 Edward I. [A.D. 1292], was read, acknowledged, and enrolled a writing wherein Roger de "Faringdon," goldsmith, servant of William de "Farindon," goldsmith, covenants to make for the Chapter of St. John de Beverle a shrine (feretrum) 5½ feet in length and 1½ feet in breadth, and of proportionate height, in honour of St. John, the patron of the church of Beverle;[5] the shrine to be

[1] Riley ('Memorials,' Introd., p. xi) conjectures this to mean the Hodere's (= Hodman's?) Rent; but from the tenement being occupied by a "feliper," or fripperer, a dealer in second-hand clothes, it appears likely that "hodere" = a maker of chaperons, or hoods.

Other materials, such as quicksilver and charcoal, necessary for constructing the work, with the exception of silver and gold, are to be provided at the said Roger's own expense. Should any statue or other work belonging to the shrine not meet with the approval of the Chapter on account of material or workmanship, whatever it may be, it is to be remade, without extra charge. The Chapter binds itself and its successors to pay in money or in bulk (in pecunia numerata vel in massa) the amount of metal used in each column, statue, &c., and no more; the said Roger offering William de "Farndone," goldsmith, as surety for any damage that may be occasioned to the Chapter through his default. If the lessees wished to extend the term for their lives they could do so by an annual payment of 40*s*. to the lessors, and in case of sale they were to have pre-emption by 1 mark. Witnesses, Simon de Warewyk, William Ediman, Joce de Fonte, Gerard le Barber, Roger de Wymbeldon, Robert Clerk, and many others [not named].

Lease by John de Meleford, junior, fruiterer, and Agnes his wife, daughter of Thomas de Hereford, to Reginald de Meldeburne, gorget-maker,[2] of a tenement in the parish of St. Mary de Aldermanburi, near the tenement of Henry de Kent. To hold for a term of ten years from Christmas next, paying to Matilda Modi an annual sum of 12 pence of silver. In case of a sale or grant for a further term, the lessee to be preferred by 40*s*.

And that these four cause the same to be repaired, put down, or raised as they shall see fit, and that they be empowered to levy distress upon those who shall do to the contrary; likewise, where they find dung opposite a tenement, they shall make distress or take 4 pence. And if they can discover at any time by whom the dung has been so placed they shall take 4 pence of him, and let the other be in peace, and the dung shall be removed at his expense. And if it happen that the four men refuse to act as commanded, the Alderman shall distrain upon them for a similar penalty. And if the Alderman do nothing after warning given by the neighbours, the Sheriff shall distrain the Alderman by grievous distress, which shall not be given up except on payment of a heavy fine.

[1] The City's 'Liber Custumarum' (Rolls Series), i. 239-46, which professes to give the names of the various Mayors, Sheriffs, Chamberlains, and Coroners from 7 Edward I. to 14 Edward II., is frequently incorrect as to the name of the Chamberlain (or Chamberlains) for the time being. In the twenty-seventh year of Edward I., John de Dunstaple and Simon de Paris appear to have been joint Chamberlains (see Letter-Book B, fo. 75), but the name of the Chamberlain for that year given in the 'Liber Custumarum' is Matthew de Columbariis.

Thursday after Epiphany [6 Jan.], 20 Edward I. [A.D. 1291–2], certain casks of wine which had been seized in the possession of merchants and burgesses of Oxford, for the reason that they had been bought of foreign merchants, and on that account had been forfeited according to the custom of the City, were, at the request of the Bishop of Bath and Wells, addressed to the Warden, Aldermen, and Sheriffs, by special favour delivered up to Richard de Garderoba, Thomas de Sowy, Henry the Apothecary, and Walter de Wycumbe, burgesses of Oxford, on condition that they would not in future make such purchases, especially from strangers, &c., in the said City, but only from citizens and freemen of the said City.

The Bishop's letter attached on a cedula.

Wednesday after the Feast of St. Gregory [12 March], 22 Edward I. [A.D. 1293–4], was read a lease from Walter de Chiggewelle, cutler, and Margery his wife, daughter of William Munchyot, smith (faber), to Nicholas Pykot, merchant, of a tenement and shop in the parish of St. Michael, Cornhill, situate near the tenement of John de Bokton. To hold for a term of fourteen years from Christmas last, for the sum of £8 in hand paid, and an annual rent of 1 mark to the nuns of St. John de Haliwell, and another mark, by way of dower, to Clemence, late wife of Henry de Evre. Witnesses, Sir John Bretoun, Warden of the City; Martin de Aumbresbere and Robert de Rokesle, Sheriffs; Martin Box, Alderman of the Fo. 105.

Ward;[1] Hamo Box, John de Bokton, Robert de Fyngreth, Ralph de Honilane, Richard de Lameth, and many others [not named].

Fo. 105 b. Monday the Feast of St. Katherine [25 Nov.], 9 Edward I. [A.D. 1280], was read a writing whereby Walter Woleward demised to William de Staunford, mercer, an annual rent of 24 marks formerly demised to the said Walter by Robert, son of Geoffrey le Marescal, and Emma his wife, issuing from their tenement situate without Neugate in the parish of St. Sepulchre. To hold to the said William for a term of eleven years from Christmas next. Witnesses, &c.

Fo. 106. Monday after the Feast of Translation of St. Edward [13 Oct.], 8 Edward I. [A.D. 1280], was read a certain agreement whereby Ralph de Balesham, saddler, demised to John Gardeboys, saddler, an annual quitrent of 3½ marks issuing from his tenement in Westchepe in the parish of St. Vedast, situate near the tenements of John Godard and Robert de Catesdone, and also charged on an annual rent of 20*s*. issuing from the tenement of Remund de Burdeus situate in Goderonlane. To hold the said annual rent of 3½ marks for a term of 12 years from Michaelmas last. Witnesses, &c.

Thursday after the Feast of [Translation of ?] St. Edward [13 Oct.], 10 Edward I. [A.D. 1282], was acknowledged a writing whereby Stephen de Oxenerode and Matilda his wife demised to John Baudri and Margery his wife a part of two shops devised to the said Matilda by Gilbert de Chesewick her father, the said shops being situate in Breggestrate, in the parish of St. Margaret and the parish of St. Magnus respectively. To hold for a term of three years from Michaelmas, A.D. 1284. Witnesses, &c.

Fo. 106 b. Monday after the Feast of Translation of St. Edward [13 Oct.], 8 Edward I. [A.D. 1280], was read a writing whereby Walter de Rokesle, corder, demised to Gregory de Rokesle an annual quitrent of 6 marks issuing from certain tenements, viz., from a tenement in St. Nicholas Lane, in the parish of St. Martin de Candlewystrate, situate near the tenements of Adam "Wodebrock" and Geoffrey le Seinturer; a tenement in the lane and parish of St. Laurence, near the tenements of Fulk de St. Edmund, Roger David, and Elias de Notingeham; and from a plot of land situate near the tenements of Godfrey (Godefridi) Schad and Arnald de "Diepe." To hold the said rent for a term of seven years from Michaelmas last. Witnesses, William de Farndone and Stephen de Cornhill, Sheriffs; Thomas de Basinge, Alderman of the Ward.[1]

The same day was read an agreement whereby Thomas, son of Walter Firbras, demised to Walter de Rokesle, corder, a tenement in St. Nicholas Lane, in the parish of St. Martin de Candlewystrate, situate near the tenements of Adam "Wodekoc" and Geoffrey Seinturer, and another tenement in the lane and parish of St. Laurence de Candlewystrate, situate near the tenements of Fulk de St. Edmund, Roger David, and Elias de Notingeham, together with a plot of land near the tenements of Geoffrey (Galfridi) Shad and Arnald de "Depe." To hold the said tenements and land for a term of seven years from Michaelmas last at an annual rent of 30*s*., the sum of 36 marks being paid in hand.

Monday after the Feast of St. Scolastica [10 Feb.], 8 Edward I. [A.D. 1279–80], the sixth year of the Mayoralty of G[regory] de Rokele, was read an agreement whereby Robert de Kyngestone and Isabella his wife demised to Robert de Suffoque a tenement in the parish of All Hallows del Heiffwarf, situate near the tenement of "Arnold" de Depe and Grenewichislane, and extending to the tenement of John de Gisors. To hold for a term of six years from Easter last for 30 marks in hand paid, and an annual rent of 20*s*. to the nuns of St. John de Haliwelle and a similar rent to John de Gisors. Fo. 107 b.

The same day was read in full Husting an agreement whereby John de Quoye and Johanna his wife, daughter of John Viel, junior, demised to Roger the Tailor their capital mansion in Bredstrete, formerly belonging to Roger le Duc, together with a shop formerly held by Hugh de Lenne, skinner. To hold for a term of eight years from Christmas, A.D. 1279, at an [Fos. 110 b-129 are devoted mainly to a record of Assizes of Bread—held yearly for the purpose of fixing the price of bread—for the years 5-20 Edward I., after which period the several Assizes are entered in a separate book preserved in the Guildhall, known as the Assisa Panis. The Assizes are not entered in strict chronological order. Thus on fos. 110 b-112 b we find the Assize for the years 16-20 Edward I.; on fos. 113-115 b the Assize for 9-13 Edward I.; on fos. 116 b-117 that for 14-15 Edward I.; and on fos. 128-129 that for 5-8 Edward I.—the earliest Assize recorded. The method of fixing the price of bread was intricate, and it is doubtful if it would serve any good purpose to set it out in extenso, whilst an abstract of it would be impracticable. Be it remembered that in the fifth year of the reign of King Edward, in the first week of Lent, there came into the Guildhall, before G[regory] de Rokesle, then Mayor, the Aldermen, and twenty-four reputable men appointed to discharge the City's debts, Simon Godard, tenant of lands and tenements in the City aforesaid formerly belonging to Geoffrey Godard, and made fine for all quarterages and arrears due for the same for 100*s.*; one moiety to be paid on Wednesday after Letare Jerusalem and before the Feast of St. Gregory [12 March], and the other on Easter Eve. And be it known that the lands and tenements of the said Geoffrey, held by Margery his wife by way of dower, are also quit by reason of the above fine, so that after her death they revert to the said Simon, his heirs or assigns. Fo. 117 b.

Thursday after the Octave [sic], 5 Edward I. [A.D. 1276–7], came William de Durham before Gregory de Rokesle, Mayor, John Adrian, Henry de Coventre, Walter le Poter, William le Mazaliner, Walter le Engleys, Hugh de Dunthon, Gilbert de Dunthon, Maurice de Wautham, Roger le Corder, and other reputable men, and rendered a true account of arrears of all his rents in London, so that he was indebted to the City to the amount of £6 13*s.* 1¾*d.*; and of this debt he was acquitted by judgment of the above reputable men by reason of his various labours at the last Iter at the Tower[1] undertaken on behalf of the City.

Thursday the Feast of SS. Simon and Jude [28 Oct.], 5 Edward I. [A.D. 1277], came the executors of A[nketin] de Auverne and paid £6 12*s.* 4*d.* for a fine due to the City, so that the said A[nketin], his heirs and executors, are for ever quit, viz., before G[regory] de Rokesle, Mayor; J[ohn], son of J[ohn] Adrien, Walter le Cornnewaleys, Sheriffs; William de Durham, John Horn, H[enry] de Coventre, N[icholas] de Wynchester,

Tuesday after the Feast of Nativity of St. John Bapt. [24 June], 13 Edward I. [A.D. 1285], there came into the Guildhall—before G[regory] de Rokesle, the Mayor; Stephen de Cornhull and Robert de Rokesle, Sheriffs; Stephen Aswy, Philip the Tailor, John Fitz Peter, John de Gisors, Thomas Box, Martin Box, William le Mazeliner, Ralph le Blound, Robert de Arraz, Joce le Akatur, Nicholas de Winchester, Anketin de Bettevile, Richard Aswy, Aldermen, and other reputable men of the City—Master Robert de Ros, Archdeacon of London, and other Canons of St. Paul's, with the King's writ as follows:—

Edward, &c., to the Mayor and Sheriffs of London greeting. Whereas, on the recent complaint of the Venerable Father R[ichard de Gravesend], Bishop of London, and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, that Henry le Galeys, at the time that he was Mayor of the City, had erected houses near the wall of St. Paul's Churchyard to the prejudice of the said Bishop, Dean, and Chapter, we sent our beloved lieges Ralph de "Hengeham" and William de Burneton to St. Martin le Grand in order to hear what both parties had to say in the matter, and to view the aforesaid houses and the injury, if any; and whereas the said Ralph and William, having heard the matter argued and viewed the houses and wall, returned and reported to us that the said houses had been built to the injury of the parties aforesaid, inasmuch as their height exceeded the height of the wall, and the tenants threw dirt out of the windows and doors into the churchyard, and walked to and fro the churchyard and their houses; and whereas they further reported that the houses stood so near the wall that their rain water dropped on to the wall, and the Bishop and Dean and Chapter were prevented by the proximity of the houses to the wall from building tenements (as they before had done) within their close for housing canons, vicars, and other ministers, because they could make no doorways to the King's highway; it is therefore adjudged in our Court that the said houses be pulled down so far as they are prejudicial to the said Bishop and Dean and Chapter. We therefore command you to see the said judgment executed without delay. Witness, R[alph] de "Hengham," at Westminster, 21 June, 13 Edward I. [A.D. 1285].

[2] The writ, so far as it relates to the weighing of corn and flour, appears to have been executed without delay, for in the succeeding year we find the following record: "Eodem anno [i. e., 1282] major Londoniarum fecit ponderare bladum versus molendinum, et iterum fecit ponderari farinam ejusdem bladi pro certo pretio" ('Chron. Edward I. and II.' [Rolls Series], i. 90).

Fo. 127 b. Edward, &c., to R[alph] de Sandwych, Warden of the City, greeting. Whereas we have recently been given to understand by our citizens of London and others that all merchants whosoever coming to the said City with wine for sale have been accustomed beyond memory to pay for each cask of wine sold by brokers of the City aforesaid the sum of 6*d.* for brokerage, and lately have understood, by certain persons on behalf of our beloved Gregory de Rokesle asserting the contrary, that merchants were accustomed of old to pay no more than 2*d.* for each cask of wine sold, by reason of which we on a former occasion commanded that brokers of wines in the City aforesaid should thenceforth take no more than 2*d.* for brokerage on every cask of wine sold; and now we understand, both from the said Gregory and others, that they have continued up to the present day to pay 6*d.* for every cask of wine sold:—We, wishing to be informed on the matter, command that you make inquiry by the oath of trustworthy citizens and foreign merchants, and certify the truth to us on the morrow of the Nativity of the Blessed Mary [8 Sept.] at Winchester. Dated "Ammbresberi,"[1] 13 August, 13 Edward I. [A.D. 1285].

Inquisition thereupon held on Tuesday after the Feast of St. Giles [1 Sept.] by Henry de Hereford, Robert Skot, Thomas de Conduit, Alan de Suffolk, taverner, Alan de Suffolk, cordwainer, John de Cestrehunte, and Roger Pigesfles, merchants of England; Hugh Megge, Thomas de Villanova, Peter de St. John, Paul de Luca, Bertin de Luka, and Emeric de St. John, foreign merchants; who declared on oath that brokers were never accustomed to take, nor they to pay, less than 6*d.* for every cask of wine sold in the City.[2]

The names of brokers of wine sworn this year: Nicholas de Suffolk, Robert Heyrun, William le Blound, Robert Corp, Andrew de Pavely, and John de Watevile.

Fo. 129 b.

Anno regni regis Eadwardi quinto incipiente sexto.

These are the Assizes of the City of London read by the Mayor and reputable men, the second year of the Mayoralty of Gregory [de Rokesle], Robert de Arraz and Ralph le Fevere being Sheriffs [A.D. 1276-7], and the third year of the same Mayoralty, Walter le Cornewaleys and John, son of John Adrian, Sheriffs [A.D. 1277-8].[3]

First, that the peace of the lord the King be well kept between Christians [and Jews].[4]

Also that two loaves be made for 1*d.* and four loaves for 1*d.*, and that none be coated with bran (furratus) or made of bran.

Also that no baker sell his bread before his oven, but in the market of the lord the King, and if he be found selling it in his own house he shall be in the mercy of the Sheriff; nor shall any one [so] buy, under pain of losing the said bread if it be found; and that no one make bread beyond the assize.

[2] This is the passage referred to supra, p. 164. Writ and return printed in 'Liber Albus' (Rolls Series), i. 401-2. Cf. 'Liber Memorandorum,' fo. 1 b; 'Liber Horn,' fo. 261.

[3] A copy of these ordinances is transcribed in 'Liber Horn,' fos. 265-267, with the following reference to Letter-Book A in a marginal note: Et sequitur proclamacio et ordinacio Maioris de a° E. fil. R. H. quinto eodem libro prope in fine. Cf. 'Liber Memorandorum,' fos. 28 et seq.

[4] The words et Judeos are crossed through. They do not occur in the other versions.

Also every baker shall have his seal on his bread, as well brown bread (bissus) as white, that it may the better be known whose the bread is.

Also that each Alderman shall view[1] the seals in his ward (custodia).

Also that no baker of white bread make tourte bread (turtum),[2] nor maker of tourte bread (turturarius) make white bread, for sale under the same penalty, nor any baker buy corn to sell again.

A gallon of ale [to be sold] for three farthings, and [another] for one penny and no dearer.[3]

And that no brewster (bracerissa)[4] henceforth sell except by true measures, viz., the gallon, the pottle, and the quart. And that they be marked with the seal of the Alderman, and that the tun be of 150 gallons and sealed by the Alderman.[5]

Also that no one take another into his house for more than one night, unless he hold him to right[6] if he make default, and his host answer for him if he departs.

Also that no one shall remain in the ward of an Alderman beyond a day and a night, unless he be in frankpledge [or] his host be willing to hold him to right.

Also that places and lanes shall be cleared of every impediment, as dung, logs, ladders (scalar'), pigs (porther'),[7] &c., under heavy penalty.

Also that no pig be henceforth found by the streets or lanes of the City or suburb, nor in the ditches of the City; and if found they shall be killed by whoever finds them, and the killer shall have them without challenge or redemption for 4 pence from the owner. Whoever wishes to feed his pigs, let him feed them in the open (in franco) away from the King's highway[1] [or] in his house, under heavy penalty.

Also that no retail dealer of corn, fish, poultry, or victuals shall buy victuals before the hour of Prime,[2] nor before the reputable men of the City have bought, under penalty of forfeiting the goods bought.

Also that no cart serving the City by bringing water, wood, stones, &c., be shod with iron (ferrata).

Also that no pentices, gutters, or jetties be of such a height (adeo alta) as to prevent persons riding under them without impediment and hurt, and that they be of the height of nine feet at least.

Also that no regratress go beyond London Bridge to buy bread and to carry it into the City, because the bakers of Southwark are not of the Justice of the City nor are allowed to be brought back from (reduci) outside the City.

And that no stall be of any other breadth than 2½ feet, Fo. 130.
and that it be movable or adjustable to the height[3] of its neighbours.

And that no foreign butcher sell meat in the City except in the manner accustomed, nor cause meat to be harboured or permit it to be again carried out of the City; nor buy meat from the Jews to sell again to Christians, or meat slaughtered for Jews and by them rejected.

Also the course of the Walebroke and all the King's road shall be freed.....

And that a porter of corn shall not sell nor measure corn, nor presume to enter a churchyard, house, or ship to remove corn, nor lay his hand upon corn, until he be called by those who have bought the corn.[1]

Also that no carman shall for the future enter the City with wood or charcoal for sale, but shall remain outside the gate at Smethefeud or elsewhere as provided, except only at Cornhull, under forfeiture.

Also that no one cause cloth to be woven [for sale] except in the City, or in Porsoken, or within the franchise of the City, and not in Suthwerk [under pain of forfeiture].[2]

Also that no woollen cloth be dyed black except in woad [under pain of forfeiture].

Also that no market be held on London Bridge, nor elsewhere except in places appointed.

Also that no one of the City go to Suthwerk to buy corn, cattle, or other merchandise there, so as to create a market there, under penalty of forfeiture of the thing bought.[3]

Also that all the lanes leading to the Thames from the highway from Castle Baynard as far as the Tower be forthwith cleaned, so that horsemen and footmen may approach the Thames freely and without hindrance; otherwise the Sheriffs shall do it at their expense (sumptibus eorum), and still they shall be heavily amerced.[4]

Also that no whore of a brothel be resident within the walls of the City.[5]

Also that lime be measured by the basket which holds half a quarter, well burnt and honestly measured.

And that tiles be well burnt and well leaded, and of ancient pattern (de veteri scantilone).[6]

Also that no one shall carry on merchandise in the City, nor make bread nor ale for sale, unless he be willing to be of the Justice of the City.

Also that no broker presume to lead merchant strangers out of the City to deal with them, nor buy any merchandise for his own use, nor harbour any strangers, nor shall any stranger harbour other merchant strangers.

No merchant who brings woad to London shall measure it, but only he who is sworn for the purpose, and by the quarter (per quarterium) of the City assigned for the purpose.

No leper shall be in the City, nor come there, nor make any stay there.

No one shall hire houses from Jews, nor demise the same to them for them to live in outside the limits of the Jewry.

Also vendors of fish shall not throw their water into the highway, but cause it to be carried to the Thames.

Also no one shall throw any filth into the highway, nor allow it to be raked in the time of rain, nor remove it so as to be a nuisance to the neighbours.

Also that no one shall have a measure, beam, or other weight, unless it be good and just and agreeing with the King's beam and weights.[1]

Monday the Feast of Translation of St. Edward [13 Oct.], 9 Edward I. [A.D. 1281], in full Husting, Gregory de Rokesle, Mayor, William le Mazerer and Richard de Chekewelle, Sheriffs, and the Aldermen, with the assent of the reputable men of the City, released and quitclaimed to Philip le Taillur all arrears of socage of 5 pence per annum for a tenement in the parish of Aldermariecherche up to Michaelmas next. Fo. 131.

Names of Oynters (unctarii) holding selds in Chepe.

Roger le Chaundeler holds three shops of his own property.

The same Roger and William de Manhale, executors of Warin de Mimmes, hold two shops, viz., one of Roger the chaplain celebrating for the soul of Roger Beyvin, and another shop of the Prior of H. Trinity.

Adam de Manhale holds two shops, viz., one shop of the aforesaid Roger, and another of the aforesaid Prior.

Lucy de Manhale holds two shops.

Richard de Lamhuthe holds a shop of John Pratis.

William de Manhale holds a shop of Michael le Oynter.

John de Chelse holds a shop of the aforesaid Michael.

Walter de Waldegrave holds a shop of the aforesaid Prior of H. Trinity.

Richard de Kent holds a shop of the aforesaid Prior.

Peter de Lamhethe holds a shop of the same.

Stephen le Chaundeler holds two shops of the same.

Friday after the Feast of St. Dunstan [19 May], 11 Edward I. [A.D. 1283], all the above oynters were warned to remove all goods appertaining to their trade from within their selds in Cheap before the Feast of Nativity of St. John next ensuing, so that they make provision elsewhere if they should see expedient.

The custom of taking distresses, as appears on another folio following.[1] [facie inversa.]

Also that all tenants of the City be warned each term on the day following the term that they pay their rents, and if they Return made non ad damnum. Dated 12 Jan., 6 Edward I.

Fo. 132. The King's letters to the Mayor and citizens of London directing them to put into execution certain articles presented by them at the late Parliament, according as it may seem best for the common weal (the King not having had leisure to examine into the matter), and to reserve any difficulty for the consideration of the next Parliament. Dated "Sothewyk," 18 Sept., 6 Edward I. [A.D. 1278].

Edward, by the grace, &c., to the Mayor, Sheriffs, and the rest of the citizens of London, greeting. Know ye that in aid of the repair of the walls and enclosures of our aforesaid City we have granted to you that from the Feast of the Nativity of our Lord in the seventh year of our reign, for a term of three years next ensuing, you take in the said City of every frail[1] of woad put to sale and brought into the City by foreign merchants the sum of 18*d.*; from every wey of cheese brought by foreign merchants into the City, for exportation or otherwise, 1*d.*; from every wey of unguent, 1*d.*; from every wey of tallow, 1*d.*; from four loads of corn, 1*d.*; from every hundred of wax, 2*d.*; from every hundred of almonds, 1*d.*; from every kark (carco)[2] of grain, 18*d.*; from every hundred of pepper, 2*d.*; from every hundred of cummin, ½*d.*; from every kark of Brisell,[3] 12*d.*; from every hundred of lake,[4] 3*d.*; from every hundred of copper, 1*d.*; from every thousand of tin, 2*d.*; from every thousand of grey-work (grisei operis),[5] 12*d.*; from every hundred coney-skins, 1*d.*; from four frails of figs, 1*d.*; from every barrel of vinegar, 2*d.*; from seven sheaves (garbis) of iron,[6] 1*d.*; from every millstone, 1*d.*; from every dozen of leather, 1*d.*; from every cask of honey, 6*d.*; from every trusell[7] of cloth, 18*d.*; from every half trusell of cloth, 9*d.*; from every thousand of herring, ½*d.*; from every kark of cymac,[8] 2*d.*; from every hundred of alum, 2*d.*; from every pound of silk (?), 1*d.*; from every sieve of salt, 1*d.*; from every kark (karrato) of lead, 2*d.*; from every cask of wine, 2*d.*; from every hundred of licorice, 1*d.*; from every "curda"[9] of ginger, 1*d.* And so we command you to take the custom for

Fo. 132 b. The King's writ enclosing a copy of certain articles ordained by his Council at Gloucester,[2] and commanding the Mayor and Sheriffs of London to see that the same be read and published in the Husting and duly observed in the City. Dated Gloucester, 14 Aug., 6 Edward I. [A.D. 1278].

Sunday before the Feast of SS. Simon and Jude [28 Oct.], 17 Edward I. [A.D. 1289], the King delivered to the Warden, Sheriffs, and Aldermen of London a certain writ in these words:—Edward, by the grace, &c., to the Warden, Sheriffs, and Aldermen of his City of London, greeting. Whereas the Commonalty of the City of London have granted to us and our most dear consort Alianora, Queen of England, a courtesy of £1,000 at our next coming to the said City after our last return from parts beyond the sea, we command that the money be raised by poll of the men of the City aforesaid who shall be sufficient and able to be assessed thereunto. Witness myself at Westminster, 14 Oct., the seventeenth year of our reign.

The names of Aldermen and others elected to sit at the Guildhall to superintend and regulate the assessment to be made by poll of the men of the City of London according to the tenor of the above writ:—John de Banquell,[3] Robert de Basinge,[4] William de Hereford[5] (these in place of the Warden), William de Bettoyn,[6] Josep le Akatur,[7]—Aldermen; John de Canterbury, Walter Hauteyn, John de Vintry, clerk.

This ordinance does not appear to have been strictly observed, for we find that in 1296, when Silvester de Farnham was summoned to carry the King's balance and weights before certain Aldermen, woolmen, pepperers, and corders, appointed by John le Bretun, the Warden, for the purpose of having them proved, the weighing instrument is described as being carried daily from house to house for weighing the goods of citizens and foreigners; and in 1303 the statute De Nova Custuma enacted that the King's balance should be (again) stationary ('Lib. Fo. 135.

Monday before the Nativity of B. M. [8 Sept.], Henry le Galeys and thirty-four other reputable men who made a loan of 100 marks to the City, in order to complete the payment of the great loan made to the lord the King, had seisin of the great hall formerly the property of Roger de Clifford in the form contained in a deed of feoffment, and the said reputable men appointed Henry le Galeys and Philip the Tailor their attorneys to hold seisin in their name until Michaelmas.

Saturday the eve of SS. Peter and Paul [29 June], 15 Edward I. [A.D. 1287], it was considered by Ralph de Sandwich, [1] He is recorded as having at Midsummer, 1280, made over to the City all his property in the Jewry besides an annual quitrent of 12*s.* 'Chron. Edward I. and II.' (Rolls Series), i. 89. A portion of this property was in 1286, and again in 1293, conveyed by the City to John de Bankewell, or Banquelle, and became famous in the cloth trade as Blackwell Hall. See Hust. Rolls, 19 (19), (20), 22 (55), (56), and Letter-Book C, fo. 6.

the Warden of the City of London, and the Aldermen of the same City, that the gates of the City should be guarded, each gate daily, by two men well and properly armed, and that they should be closed at night by serjeants living in the said gates, and that the said serjeants should have a woyte[1] at their own expense.

It was considered that at the gates of Ludgate and Neugate ... ...
- The Ward of William de Farendon within and without.
- The Ward of Castle Beynard.
- The Ward of Anketin de Bettevile.[2]
- The Ward of Henry le Galeys.[3]

At the gate of Aldridesgate ... ...
- The Ward of William le Mazeliner.[4]
- Bassieshawe.
- Colemannestrate.

At the gate of Crepelgate ... ...
- The Ward of Chepe.
- The Ward of Simon de Hadestok.[5]
- The Ward of John de Banquell.[6]
- The Ward of John de Gisors.[7]

Bissopesgate guarded by
- The Ward of Philip the Tailor.[8] The Ward of Cornhull. The Ward of R. de Arraz.[9] The Ward of Limestrate. By Danes, so that they be in the middle, and the men of the Wards below and above.

Alegate guarded by ...
- The Ward of William de Hereford.[10]
- The Ward of Porsoken.
- The Ward of Nicholas de Winchester.[11]
- The Ward of Robert de Basinges.[12]
- The Ward of Walebrock.
- [The Ward of Cornhulle.[13]]
- [The Ward of Limstrate.[13]]
- Of William de Hadestock.[14]

The gate of London Bridge ... ...
- The Ward of Bridge.
- The Ward of Billingesgate.
- The Ward of Douuegate.

[1] Perhaps for wayte, i. e., watch or ward.

[3] Cordwainer Street.
[4] Aldersgate.
[5] Queenhithe.
[6] Dowgate (?).
[7] Vintry.
[8] Bishopsgate.
[9] Lothbury (Broad Street).
[10] Aldgate.
[11] Langbourn.
[12] Candlewick.
[13] Struck out in the original.
[14] Tower.

And three Wards are exempt from keeping guard ... ... { [The Ward of W. Hadestok.[1]] [The Ward of Robert de Arras.[1]] [The Ward of Porsoken.[1]]

The watches by night at the gates ... ... { Of Ludegate, 1 watch. Of Crepelgate, 1 watch. Of Alegate, 1 watch. Of Bridge, 1 watch.

Be it remembered that Sir R[oger] de Clifford, senior, enfeoffed the Mayor and citizens of London of his house, &c.; also of 8*s*. annually to be levied on the tenement of the Prior of H. Trinity, London, in Chepe, between the tenement of John Fitz Peter on the one part and the lane called Ismongerelane on the other, under penalty of one tiercel[2] of the value of 10*s*. if the said rent be not paid on the day named; also of 4*s*. to be derived from the house of Benedict Bateman the Jew, situate in the Jewry between the tenements of Stephen Aswy and Gamaliel the Jew. Fo. 135 b.

Elyas, son of Elyas de Hertford, puts in his place Thomas de Gersingdon against Peter May and Emma his wife.

Tuesday after the octave of H. Trinity [24 May], 10 Edward I. [A.D. 1282], Arnald de St. John was admitted to the freedom of the City on the surety of Thomas de Suffolk and Richard de Morton (?), who testify that they are not bound in any debt in parts beyond the sea whereby the City could suffer prejudice. And for his [Arnald's] admission to the freedom aforesaid Hugh Moton received 40*s*. to the use of the City.

Thursday before the Feast of St. Peter ad Vincula [1 Aug.], 5 Edward I. [A.D. 1277], came Richard de Bury, Henry de Pelham, and Hugh de Byflete to the Guildhall and became sureties for William de Wautham, cordwainer, that he would faithfully guard the gate of Ludgate and maintain the same according to the wishes of the Mayor and other reputable men of the City. [facie inversa.]

Henry le Joevene, Nicholas Horn, William de la Hithe, and Alfred le Bureller attached for detaining the sum of 6*s*. due for woad delivered for the purpose of assay by Hugh le Riche. cedula.

[1] Struck out in the original. | [2] A male hawk.

The defendants plead that they had assayed the woad according to the custom of the City and had paid all the money due under that assay. The plaintiff declares that the woad was worth more than the price put upon it by the defendants. Both parties demand a jury, &c.....and whereas it was proved by reputable men of the City that the custom of the City and of the woad-mongers is such that when any woad-monger delivers woad to any one for assay, the assayer shall not pay more than a certain price per quarter fixed by the assayer—it is adjudged that the aforesaid Hugh shall not take more than the price at which his woad was assayed by the defendants, and that he shall be in mercy for a false claim.
